

Great prospects for summer in Dublin city

DUBLIN shone last month for some special visitors who enjoyed all the city has to offer.

The capital will continue to shine this summer thanks to a hot line-up of exciting events.

People of all ages will be kept well entertained with a whole host of special events taking place from June to September.

Free

Across the capital, public spaces, parks, squares and city streets will come alive with a variety of special summer events being held at a number of locations - most of which are free of charge.

Embark on the well-loved Joycean Bloomsday trail through the city or wow yourself and your children at the Street Performance World Championships.

Enjoy dance, theatre and circus workshops at the Urban Living on Wolfe Tone Square or samba around Grafton Street in tribute to Dublin rocker Phil Lynott.

July is 'Culture Month' at Clerys department store where you can immerse yourself in a showcase of international wonders.

The 'Made in Temple Bar' cultural celebration also takes place in July and of course you can simply visit one of the many music events and exhibitions taking place in venues across town. Something for everyone is promised.

Richard Guiney, chief executive of Dublin City Business Improvement District (BID) said: "The city is an especially vibrant place during the summer.

"We have a great line up for families who are looking forward to the holidays and I hope they enjoy the wonderful programme of events.

"As the weather heats up, so too does the atmosphere. There will be something happening for everyone no matter when they visit, no matter their age or interests, making Dublin city the place to be this summer."

Offer

Lord Mayor of Dublin, Cllr Gerry Breen, has invited all Dubliners and visitors to come into the capital to see what is on offer.

"There is something for everyone over the summer months throughout the city," he said.

"I would like to congratulate all involved in organising the many different events.
